The e-library service is not terminated, the public can still browse and read

Local

KUALA LUMPUR (Jan 29): The National Library of China said it has not terminated the service of the Electronic Library Service (E-Lib) database, and the public can still browse up to 1,500 reading materials through the service.

In a statement, the National Library pointed out that Astro AWANI's report yesterday alleging that the National Library had recently terminated the service was false.

The outlet said the National Library had stopped letting the public subscribe to local e-books and issued termination notices to some suppliers and publishers.
